$ = USD $50 and under

$$$$ = USD $121 and upwards

This is based on an average price for a 3-course dinner per person without wine.

The great culinary revolution which has swept Spain over the last 20 years is most apparent in the north, in Catalonia, the Basque Country, Madrid and Barcelona but is nevertheless increasingly present in the south, and Seville too now has its share of restaurants offering state-of-the art contemporary “designer” cuisine. However, traditions remain strongly rooted, so our list for Seville reflects both the best restaurants acclaimed for their sophisticated fare and others which have not changed for decades; and none the worse for that; for example the traditional local speciality, found everywhere, is fried fish, “pescaíto Frito”, of tremendous variety and always beautifully fresh. Also, Andalucía is home of the finest ham in Spain, coming from the region of Jabugo.

And then of course there are tapas. In Seville it is not as sophisticated as in San Sebastián but here is a city where to stroll from one bar to another enjoying a “ración” or two is rooted in the way of life. There are whole streets and districts where the opportunities to enjoy tapas come one after the other and there is no more pleasurable way of enjoying an evening or lunchtime than strolling gently in their pursuit.
